Who Am I?

I consider myself a sophophile and a person with a high passion to learn and grow. For me shaping myself to my current point in my life as well as career has been an entire journey of exploring, failing, and learning. Looking back and connecting the dots now makes me realize that consistency has been my strongest trait all through the years and has paid me very well. Having faith that things will work out to the best and doing my duties without being attached to the results is the main learning that I discovered in the journey of shaping my career. There are many instances in my life which form the basis of my learnings. One such event was when I with my teammates participated in the design contest organized by Texas Instruments and IIM Bangalore. The semi-final round was held in an offline mode during a time when all of us were busy with our summer internships due to which none of my teammates were ready to attend the event. Since I led the team I took the responsibility of attending the event even without my teammates. In the event, we did not qualify for the finals but I received some very good comments regarding our project design. This single incident inculcated in me a sense of responsibility and leadership. I realized that to make something successful as a team we need to be selfless and highly flexible. Although we were not the finalist this experience gave me some very good insights. It gave me firsthand experience of actually taking up a leadership role at my level. Another event was when I failed to get a good percentile in CAT during my initial attempt in the year 2021. Although I worked hard, I was not able to clear my cutoff for the verbal section. The incident was very difficult for me to handle since I did not get any good calls back then. During that point in my life, I realized that if we dream big we should also be ready to pay the cost for it. With this thought in my mind, I decided not to settle for less and move on. Soon after that, I made a switch with a hundred percent hike in a top Multinational Company(American Express). This incident gave me a new perspective on handling difficult situations. Nine months into my new role in a new company I mustered up the courage to attempt CAT again and was finally able to get good calls. Getting the calls made me realize the importance of consistency and never giving up. Between the period of my two CAT attempts, I made some broad organizations in my habits. I started with meditation which helped me develop a clear perspective and made me calmer. It made me realize the power of peace. In addition to it, I also took to tutoring kids of an NGO named Bhumi in an online mode which gave me a chance to mentor them as well and made me realize the importance of education. I used to teach them basic Computer Science and delivering this knowledge gave me a sense of empowerment. Apart from the above activities I also took to learning new things like driving a car and maintaining a page on motivational and spiritual content on Instagram. I upskilled myself by taking various courses and making the application of those skills in my work at American Express. Doing these things helped me improve my mindset and made my thinking capability clearer. It also increased my pressure-handling capability and gave a positive perspective to me. Thus, throughout my journey into my career and life, I have faced many ups and down but the learning that I have gained in this process has made me wise and promoted my decision-making capability. It has made me more pragmatic and changed my perspective on many things in my life like a failure. This entire process made me realize that "It ain't about how hard you hit. It's about how hard you can get hit and keep moving forward; how much you can take and keep moving forward. That's how winning is done!"
